* Who were picked for Dialogues?

Each and every country's ambassador' office at the UN (191) was contacted.

Some have asked why their country is not represented. You may ask your representatives, for several "could not make the time" with busy schedules. In initial calls, there was some emphasis on the Middle East, and countries which exemplified making it through conflict to the other side, who got through the suffering of war or severe challenges. These were the first who responded. No one was refused because of country, size, or ideology.

As with 1983 and 1993, my own limitations of resources and time, and the sheer volume of vital material had me stop taking interviews at this point. I would have greatly enjoyed getting in all.

After 28 interviews, there was too much footage for a single documentary. Indeed, 95% of the footage had to be left on the floor, barely doing each Ambassador justice, and could be enough for several more works. I do regret not being able to fit in more of the vital thought of these interviews. By early May 2004 all filming and interviews were completed. The goal was to get this released before the 2004 US election.
